COYOTE CHORUS

One day Wuff and Sammy were out strolling on the desert when they heard stealthy footsteps behind them.

"It's Charlie Coyote," Wuff gulped, "and there's no place to hide out here!"

"Well, don't stand there gaping, let's run!" Sammy suggested sensibly.

In another moment, the two friends were streaking across the desert. They careened around cacti, galloped through gullies, and whizzed down washes.

"Say, something funny's going on here," Wuff panted some time later. "Charlie could have easily caught one of us by now, but he's staying the same distance behind."

Within a short time, Charlie managed to chase the two friends into a narrow canyon.

"We're trapped for good now!" Sammy wailed.

"Oh, no, we're not!" Wuff insisted stoutly. "This canyon may be narrow, but we can still keep dodging as long as our breath holds out."

Sammy glanced around wildly. "Look, Wuff!" he gasped with alarm. "Charlie's brother is behind that rock! And two of his cousins are behind another! We're surrounded!"

Charlie Coyote chuckled in the distance. "Now you see why I didn't try to catch one of you before," he growled triumphantly. "Two in a canyon is worth one in the bush, I always say. That's why I herded you up here where my family is."

Wuff and Sammy cowered close to the ground, their little eyes darting about nervously as the leering coyotes began to close in with gnashing white teeth.

"Scat!" Wuff whispered to Sammy. "I just thought of a way we may be able to get out of this mess. Get set to scoot!"

Wuff turned to Charlie with a pleading look. "You've got us for sure, Charlie, but please grant us one last request," he begged.

"What is it?" Charlie growled suspiciously.

"Well," Wuff explained, "we've always admired your beautiful voice when you howl a tune at night. I wonder if you would sing for us just once more before you . . . uh . . . before you get on with your (gulp) plans."

Charlie's face broke into a pleased grin. "Now that you mention it, I am rather good at singing, aren't I?" he said vainly.

He lifted his head and stretched his neck, giving voice to a long mournful howl.

"Golly, Charlie, that was magnificent!" Wuff said admiringly at the end of Charlie's song. He glanced slyly at the other coyotes. "I'll bet there isn't anybody else in the whole world who can match your voice!"

"Harumph!" Charlie's brother growled indignantly. "You haven't heard anything yet. Just listen to me sing."

"And me, too," Charlie's cousin echoed.

"And me," another cousin chimed in.

Soon the air was filled with throaty howls as Charlie joined his relatives, each one trying to out-do the other.

"Keep it up! Keep singing!" Wuff said encouragingly. "I can't tell yet which one of you has the most beautiful voice."

While the coyotes kept their heads high in the air, singing their mournful tunes, Wuff nodded to Sammy, and the two friends slinked away into the gathering darkness. Soon the coyote chorus was left far behind.

"They'll be howling for a different reason when they discover we've escaped," Sammy giggled as they sped towards home.

"Uh-huh," Wuff snickered, "getting away from them was pretty simple, after all. All we had to do was trick them into opening their traps!"
